

Fly fishing The Bitterroot

Fly fishing on the Bitterroot is a western experience like no other. Mist lifting off morning water turns to crisp mountain days on the river. Days are full of fly rod casts over riffles and glides, and the lookout for rising trout, hoping a skwala was the right choice. Sunshine or clouds, a day on the river is worth it.

Fly fishing vacations in Montana are experiences of a lifetime. Guided river adventures in Montana are known for endless views of snow-capped mountains, pure clean waters, towering Ponderosa Pine forests, bald eagles, elk, and a million more sights and smells. We love it, that's why we live here. Sula Fly Fishing guides enjoy seeing the smiles on people's faces when they see a mule deer standing in the river, or hook a healthy rainbow trout while wading a run.

The Bitterroot River

The fame of the Bitterroot River reaches back to the day of Lewis and Clark. They remembered this river as the southern guide from Traveler's Rest. Today, fishermen float the Bitterroot River for world-class trout fishing, gin clear mountain waters, and the endless vistas of the Bitterroot Mountains.

From its origins in the Pintlar Mountains and the southern Bitterroot Mountains, the Bitterroot River flows north through the towns of Sula, Darby, Hamilton, Stevensville, Florence, and Missoula. Fishermen enjoy days of catching primarily West slope Cutthroat and Rainbow Trout, with a smattering of feisty Brown Trout. Though the Bitterroot River passes through a populated valley, it is common to see elk, deer, moose, bald eagles, osprey, ducks and other waterbirds, as well as the occasional river otter or one of the many other critters residing in the lush river corridor.

The fishing guides for Sula Mountain Fly Fishing have been guiding fishing trips on the Bitterroot River, Clark Fork River, Blackfoot River, Big Hole River, Beaverhead River, Madison River, and the Missouri for many years. These trips are run by guides who understand that great fly fishing trips come from being passionate about living on the river, fishing, and loving Montana's big sky.

Sula Fly Fishing provides expert guided fly fishing trips in the Montana West. Professional guides take you to the best water, give patient instruction, supply a big healthy lunch, and a safe and well equipped boat. Take advantage of their expert knowledge of the river and community. Enjoy panoramic views of the Bitterroot Mountain Range, crystal clear mountain water, and populations of wild trout. End the day in camaraderie over pints with good folks at one of our local micro breweries.
